EXECUTIVE Council of Australian Jewry honorary secretary Josie Lacey has been elected to the new Police Ethnic Communities Advisory Council.

The Council will comprise about 11 members representing various ethnic communities throughout New South Wales.

Ms Lacey, who was elected to represent the Ethnic Communities Council, said she " would, in effect, represent the Jewish community through her ECC role ".

The Council, which will convene its first meeting on June 24, will examine such issues as the way policing manners impact on ethnic communities.

" The Council will look at ways in which police can be more sensitive to ethnic groups in a way which will benefit both parties, " police media spokesman Alan Small said. " It is the first time that an advisory body will report directly to the Police Commissioner. "
