EXHAUSTED MAN CAPTURED

A policeman yesterday captured an exhausted man at Woollahra after a mile-and-a-half chase.

The man fell in a state of collapse. " I'm done; you can take me, " he said. Constable Harry Jenkins, of Paddington police, arrested him. Jenkins is a former Eastern Suburbs firsts grade Rugby Union forward and Bondi surf life-saver.

Constables Jenkins and Jim Watts were patrolling in Thorne Street, Edgecliff, at 5 p.m.

They saw a man enter a house, and recognised him as a man for whose arrest police held a warrant.

A woman invited Constable Jenkins into the house, where the man denied he was the one the police wanted. He agreed to accompany Jenkins to Paddington police station.

Door slammed

As they were leaving the house, the man pushed Jenkins backwards and slammed the door in his face. He had more than 30 yards start when Jenkins opened the door.

The man ran from Thorne Street on to a large, vacant allotment and crashed through dense bushes and scrub. Constable Jenkins and the man fell and rolled through the bushes and down steep, rough slopes during the chase.

Just as Jenkins over took him, in a thick clump of scrub, the man fell exhausted and surrendered. Constable Watts reached the spot shortly afterwards.

The two policemen had to assist the exhausted man – a 27-years-old meat lumper – a mile and a half back to the car.

He seems quite content to browse in the long grass at the station, but Vaucluse police are anxious to find his owner. Samson is carrying about £3 worth of wool.

A SURF MEDAL which disappeared while the winner, George Brown, was overseas with the 5th Field Ambulance in World War I has been returned to him in a roundabout way.

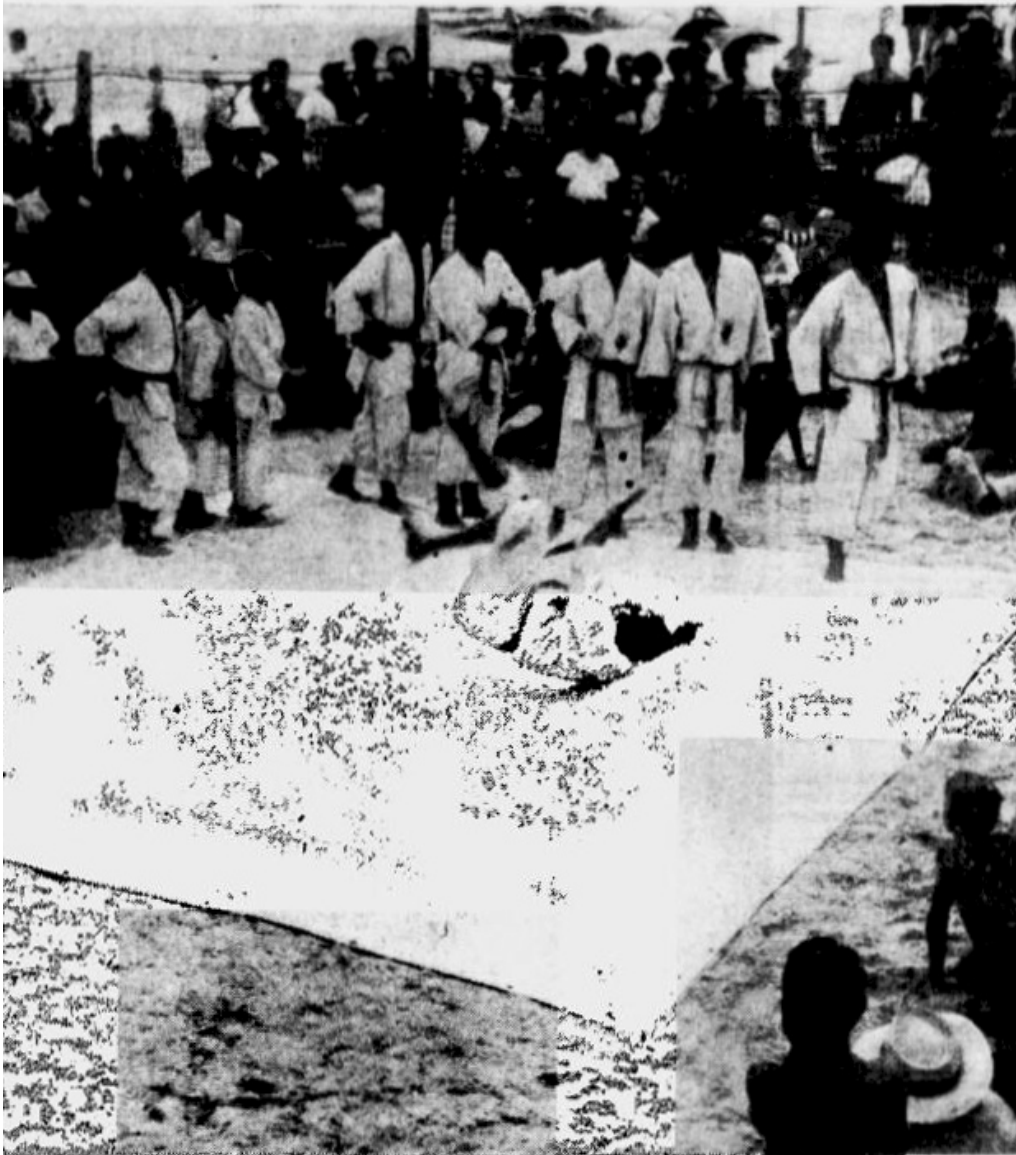

Police found it a few weeks ago while searching the home of a man they had arrested.

They gave it to Detective Harry Jenkins, who passed it on to fellow Bondi Surf Club member Les Fingleton. He handed it to Brown in a "little ceremony" at The Lakes Golf Club bowling green.

Mr. Brown, now race-horse owner, golfer and bowler, won the medal in 1915, for the first rescue and resuscitation event conducted by the Surf Bathers' Association, now the Surf Life Saving Association.

On 31 July, 1959 Constable Clifton rode his police motor cycle outfit from his home to the Parramatta Police Station where he had a meeting with local detectives.
