Officer granted prestigious honour

Mathew Rodda

South Australia Police

Constable Sharynne Grant's 40 years of distinguished service with South Australia Police (SAPOL) has been recognised in the 2016 Australia Day awards with an Australian Police Medal (APM).

Constable Sharynne Grant with Commissioner Grant Stevens at Government House.

Constable Grant joined SAPOL in 1975 and worked in a range of operational areas before becoming a Victim Contact Officer in 1994.

For the past 20 years she has been committed to providing outstanding services to victims of crime and persons affected by trauma. Constable Grant brings to the role a passion for service to victims and an empathy for them that goes beyond mere words of comfort.

She has created special bonds, particularly with vulnerable victims, and made herself available, at work and in her own time, providing practical and emotional support to families and victims of crime.

Constable Grant's knowledge of procedures, processes, and services to victims and her commitment to assisting has been invaluable to investigators.

"I'm thrilled and honoured to receive the APM," Constable Grant said.

"I've been passionate about assisting victims throughout my whole career, so this is the greatest reward I could ever achieve for my work.

"Many of the victims I have helped over the years have contacted me to share their kind words and excitement about my award recognition, which makes it even more special."

SAPOL's longest ever serving female officer, Constable Grant has previously been nominated for the South Australia Police Officer of the Year award and been awarded life membership by Victim Support Services.

Tributes paid to longest-serving female police officer the late Constable Sharynne Grant

ACTING Premier John Rau and Police Commissioner Grant Stevens have paid tribute to South Australia's longest serving female officer after she died in the city on Tuesday night.

Constable Sharynne Grant's death was not considered suspicious.

Mr Rau described Constable Grant as a "highly-respected and long-serving member of our police force".

"As South Australia's longest ever serving female officer, she was a guiding light for many of her colleagues," he said.

“Constable Grant excelled in her career, and particularly so in her service as a Victim Contact Officer.

“(Her) passion for her role and empathy has provided tremendous support to victims and their families.

“Our condolences are with (Constable Grant’s) family, friends and colleagues at this difficult time.”

Mr Stevens described Constable Grant’s death as “tragic”.

“On behalf of all members of the South Australia Police, I extend our condolences to Sharynne’s family, friends and colleagues,” he said.

“On a personal note, I am deeply saddened by her death.

“It would be inappropriate for me to further discuss the circumstances of this matter, but in keeping with usual practice a report will be prepared for the State Coroner.”

Constable Grant joined SA Police in 1975 and remained in the force until she died.

Her service to the community and support for victims of crime and those affected by trauma was recognised on Australia Day this year when she was awarded an Australian Police Medal.

In November last year, Constable Grant told ABC News it was “very emotional” being the longest serving female officer.

She said it was vital that women have a strong presence in the police force.

“I think it’s very important, they do a wonderful job,” she told the ABC.

“We’ve got a female deputy commissioner, she’s fantastic, through the ranks, and they just do wonderful work, really wonderful work and equal work with the men.

Police Association of SA president Mark Carroll also passed on his condolences.

“Sharynne was a deeply respected member of the police community, loved my many and her passing is a terrible tragedy,” he said.

Snapshots of a century of women in police in South Australia

Policewomen at 100 anniversary march

Sharynee Grant (far right) with other officers wearing different South Australian police uniforms from over the years at the march in Adelaide.

Hundreds of female police officers, past and present, have marched through Adelaide's CBD to mark 100 years of women in the police force.

South Australia appointed its first female officers as equals with their male counterparts, on December 1, 1915.

At the time, a large percentage of Adelaide's men were overseas fighting in World War I and calls were made to employ female officers.

South Australia's longest serving female police officer Constable Sharynne Grant has seen many changes over the years. Ms Grant has been a police officer for almost 41 years and said she was drawn to the force after meeting "a wonderful female police officer".

"I joined in 1975, I graduated that year, and I joined because of a wonderful female police officer I'd met in 1961," Ms Grant said.

"Lots of changes in uniform, and lots of changes in women just doing everything.

"I was the second group of females on patrols, on mixed patrols, and there are a lot more females now, there's 1,264." She said it is vital that there is a strong female presence in the police force.

"I think it's very important, they do a wonderful job," she said.

"We've got a female deputy commissioner, she's fantastic, through the ranks, and they just do wonderful work, really wonderful work and equal work with the men.

"It's very emotional for me, being the longest serving and probably the oldest, it's very emotional."

South Australia Police will recognise a significant milestone in history on Tuesday (1 Dec) with a street parade in Adelaide's CBD celebrating a century of women in policing.

On December 1, 1915 South Australia Police appointed its first female officers as equals with their male counterparts. They were the first women police officers commissioned in the then British Empire and among the first in the world.

Over the next week, in recognition of 100 years of women in policing, we are publishing some short videos memories from police women past and present.

Today we feature Constable Sharynne Grant (SAPOL 1975-current), who shows how the 'history' of SAPOL is still unfolding today. Other snapshots can be seen on the SAPOL Facebook page, or YouTube account.

These women will be among those attending the parade, which will also feature the Band of the South Australia Police, mounted police, present and retired officers, PSOs, ASOs, historic uniforms and vehicles.

Tuesday's street parade – which starts outside Police Headquarters, 100 Angas Street at 10am – will move around Victoria Square, travel down King William St and end at Government House about 11am.

We hope to see you there!

Above this – messages only refer to the ‘street parade’ of 1 December 2015.

Name Savage Obsessions

Genre Mystery/Crime

Author Glen McNamara

Publisher New Holland

Year 2012

Pages 147

RRP 29.95

Glen McNamara – who was set up in the police force by corrupt officers he investigated, then was cleared, then pensioned off – is presented here as the archetypal honest cop who flew in the face of a corrupt system and was savaged by it. Even though he is writing about himself, it has a ring of authenticity. A former investigator with the National Crime Authority and with the NSW Police, where he was a detective stationed in Kings Cross and Sydney's south, he gave evidence to the NSW Police Royal Commission about alleged police protection of paedophiles.

With Savage Obsessions: True Crime from the Streets of Kings Cross, McNamara has joined other former police, such as former assistant commissioner Clive Small, in writing about crime, capitalising on its popularity – as exemplified by the success of the Underbelly TV series – and drawing on the vast volume of inside information available to police.

His chapters are fairly short and each tells a different story. But the linking theme, about criminal obsession (“The criminal mind is self-obsessed and determined, and I realised that this trait knows no boundaries, professional or otherwise”) seems to work.

What amounts to a series of snapshots of police work does give some revealing insights, including into the corruption and brutality once prevalent in Kings Cross, seen from the inside.

Savage Obsessions
by Glen McNamara.
New Holland,
$29.95.

Some insights are new, such as the horrific sexual abuse paedophile “Dolly” Dunn committed while on the staff of Catholic schools – an aspect of Dunn’s life hinted at but never disclosed. It does raise the question of how he continued so long.

McNamara confirms what was suggested as a defence in the Schapelle Corby case, that there has been a corrupt ring of airport baggage handlers dealing in illicit drugs, and mentions the case of an unnamed couple who got right through the international barriers and then found drugs in their bag.

He goes in detail into the wretched tangle surrounding drug dealer Warren Lanfranchi and his supposed girlfriend Sally Ann Huckstepp. Also, he deals with the wretchedness of Rick Hazell, who was drawn into paedophile protection, gave evidence to the Police Royal Commission and died in circumstances a coroner found were an accident but which McNamara believes was murder.

Like any account by a former cop, the presentation is all black and white, with no attempt at interpretation on sociological lines. People are either law abiders or rotters.

There could be no compassion for sex offender Bruce Synold who, according to McNamara, boasted that he would crawl naked into people's bedrooms, slither across the floor like a snake and touch the sleeping couple lightly "to see if they would stir". Or cat burglar John Harvey Rider, who sneaked into the bedrooms of sleeping children. There is no doubt that a "homicidal maniac", Mark Hampson, with his Rasputin-like beard and his penchant for swords, was a bad man. And so were rapist Bilal Skaf and adoptive parent-killer Heidi McGarvie.

But the selection of cases rather glosses over, by omission, the vast array of other stories that could be told about people who have committed offences. Qualifications can be written into some accounts of crime to explain how these dreadful things happened. And, from time to time, how people are wrongly convicted.
